So, what is happening with the Coal Dock?

At this time, the Harbor Commission is advertising for bids for the project. The bid opening will be on September 27. After that time, the Harbor Commission will have a meeting to consider the bid results. In the meantime, the City is waiting on one more permit to be approved from the Army Corps of Engineers. Assuming the bid results are successful and the final permit is received, it is the intention of the City to have work start on this project in October. Once we would get close to this point, notice will be provided about public access closures to the dock during construction.

At this time, the public can still access the end of the dock on the left side while driving out. The Harbor Commission has agreements with several companies to allow for use of the dock going into next year, and we ask the public to please respect the materials and equipment that are placed on the dock by these companies to avoid the need for fencing.
